

Jott Networks Announces Canadian Service Expansion

Seattle, Washington February 12, 2008— Jott Networks, a communications and organization company based in Seattle, today announced service expansion throughout Canada. From Montreal to Vancouver, more Canadians can now take advantage of the voice to text service offered by Jott using new Canadian local access numbers and their mobile phones.

Jott offers busy people a simple way to capture thoughts while away from their computers. Mobile professionals and active family members follow a simple two step process with Jott: dial a number and speak a message. Upon returning home or to the office, that message will be waiting in the form of an email, making remembering everything that needs to be accomplished, easy as can be.

Over the past year, Jott has expanded to allow consumers to use their voices to send email and text messages to contacts, post to web services like Google™ Calendar and Yahoo! Groups, create to-do lists and set reminders. The Jott voice to text method of communication and organization gives precious minutes back to those with jam-packed days. In time trial research conducted by the company, email and text messages were created more than three times faster with Jott than thumb-typing the same messages.

The Jott service has been available in Toronto since 2006. Until today, those faithful Jott customers outside the Toronto area needed to call a 647 area code number to use the Jott service, resulting in long-distance fees. Introducing these new local numbers allows greater free access to the Jott service for Canadians.

Jott Networks CEO John Pollard commented, “We are very excited to expand our service beyond the Toronto area. It has taken time to find a solid alternative to the toll free number our company uses in the U.S. Today we can finally offer most Canadians the same great voice to text service without them having to shoulder long distance fees.”

Jott is currently a free service in Beta. All Canadians with a mobile phone can sign up for a free account at www.Jott.com. Standard text messaging rates as agreed upon with your mobile carrier apply. A complete list of the available Canadian numbers appears below.
